~6:30pm Introductions

~7:00pm Panelists will include

Brian C. Harris, President of Zero Net Energy Working Group, will discuss the opportunity for dramatically reducing fossil fuel use through new energy efficient building practices. He will reveal how the present popularity of solar power is impacting energy use decisions at the government, utility, developer and architect/building contractor levels. He will discuss how transformation of thinking on these topics could support a new relationship between human beings, natural resources and the environment.

Shyaam Shabaka, WISR PhD Student, Board member and President Emeritus of Food First and founder and director of EcoVillage Farm in Richmond <http://ecovillagefarm.org/>, will offer a critical analysis of the current food and environmental movement.

Signe Mattson, of the Gill Tract Farm Coalition, will talk about the struggles with the University of California over the Gill Tract land at the corner of Buchanan (at the base of Marin) and San Pablo Avenue in Albany. The Coalition is working to develop this area as a center for agro-ecological study and food production for local food security while the University is pursuing money making developments.
